Admiral Togo Impressed by Experience to Soldiers in What He Saw at Navy Yard.

TO BE USED BY BOTH BRANCHES OF SERVICE

Army to Use It to Defend Canal, and It Will Be Placed on New Dreadnaughts.

Fourteen-inch guns, for army and havy offense and defense, are now an actuality in the military service of the United States. This was the most startling fact that confronted Admiral Togo, the ranking officer of the Japanose navy, on his visit to the United States. Though the admiral expressed only mild and polite interest to Captain Beattie and the officers escorting him vestment, through the Washington Navy Yard, when he saw the great fourteen-inch armament completed and in process of manufacture, it became known through

Difficulty Overcome.

These two features have held the foreign navies more or less in check, but they were secretly overcome by our army and navy ordnance experts more than a year ago, and given a satisfactory trial at Indian Head. The change from 12 to 14 inch guns was made secretly. Only in the last few weeks, with the Panama Canal fortification started and the plans for armament of the two new dreadnaughts approved, has the world grasped the fact that 14-inch rides were an actuality and not an experiment by the American military authorities. Although Secretary of the Navy Meyer sent out a circular several months ago to navy yard commandants, cautioning them to use the greatcare and judgment in showing forest care and judgment in showing for-eign naval experts through our yards and stations, an exception was made with Admiral Togo. No accurate description of the tremendous size of the new monsters of destruction can be written. It is a fact, however, that one of these guns can accommodate on the barrel an entire company of marines.

In satisfactory tests of the field wireless; in the demonstration of the practicability of mobilizing an invading force on a day's notice; in the tryout of the new field ordinance, and in the vindication of the substitution of automobiles for the heavy army wagon, Maj. Gen. William H. Carter belives the Texas manuevers demonstrated great improvement in the national defense.

General Carer commanded the field division during the Mexican war scare. He has returned to his old position of Assistant Chief of Staff, and he has given out a statement on the recent mebilization.

This is the opinion expressed by radcal leaders: As government by the people is a reality in England today, congratulatory reality in England today, congratulatory telegrams are pouring in on Premier Asquith and his able lieutenants from every section of the empire.

The house of commons, made up of members elected by the people, and who will in the future be salaried officials, is to be the sole factor in making up the annual budget, deciding what shall and shall not be taxed, and running the British government. Heretofore, the house of lords had equal power with the commons in all legislation. Now, if may merely suspend the operation of fiscal legislation for a brief period, but if the bill is repassed by the commons, it becomes a law regardless of the attitude of the upper chamber. The amended law makes constitutional government a reality, and perpetuates the liberal control of British affairs.

The general sentiment of the conservatives is that when the lords accepted the veto bill by 131 votes to 114, they accepted the lesser of two evils and are temporarily putting up with a condition they expect speedily to change. They predict that the veto measure finally will be repudiated by the electorate. the electorate.
